Rahere – Part 1

In the heart of London, only a few blocks from St. Paul’s Cathedral and the Old Bailey, you find two amazing monuments.

The first is the church of St. Bartholomew the Great. Fronting a narrow street opposite the Smithfield market, it stands there heavy with age. As you enter the porch and slowly swing wide the great oak door, the centuries peel away. You go down the steps and in the dimly lighted aisles find yourself among the sleeping saints of an era long departed—the age of faith. St. Bartholomew’s was begun in A.D. 1123.

It is a monument to a remarkable man named Rahere, an easy-living courtier who served King Henry I. He well might have attained fame in his own day for his witting conversations. But a tragedy came to the court: the king’s son and heir was lost in the wreck of the White Ship. In the gloom that fell over the court, Rahere resolved to undertake a pilgrimage. On the way he fell dangerously ill, perhaps from malaria. The courtier had ample time to reflect on the meaning of life as his health slowly returned. Now his past achievements seemed strangely unsatisfying, and with a sudden resolve he determined to build a hospital for the poor of his native city of London, and a church.

Rahere returned to England with fixed purpose, and in March of 1123 began the church building. Like the hospital, he built it just outside the walls of the ancient city of London.

And for more than eight hundred years it has stood as a monument to one man’s quest for meaning in life.

You find the second monument inside the ancient church. As you pass slowly along its aisles, noting the resting places of forgotten men and women, you come upon a marble bust attached to the wall. The inscription identifies it as placed by Edward Cooke, who died in 1652. Strain hard and you can make out these lines beneath his stony head:

Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that you may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man avails much.

James 5:16

There is a much greater work devolving upon the individual members of the church than they realize. They are not awake to the claims of GOD. The time has come when every means should be devised that can aid in preparing a people to stand in the day of GOD. We must be wide awake, refusing to let precious opportunities pass unimproved. We must do all that we possibly can to win souls to love GOD and keep HIS commandments. JESUS requires this of those who know the truth. Is HIS demand unreasonable? Have we not the life of CHRIST as our example? Do we not owe the SAVIOR a debt of love, of earnest, unselfish labor for the salvation of those for whom HE gave HIS life?

Many of the members of our large churches are doing comparatively nothing. They might accomplish a good work if, instead of crowding together, they would scatter into places that have not yet been entered by the truth. Trees that are planted too thickly do not flourish. They are transplanted by the gardener, that they may have room to grow and not become dwarfed and sickly. The same rule would work well for our large churches. Many of the members are dying spiritually for want of this very work. They are becoming sickly and inefficient. Transplanted, they would have room to grow strong and vigorous.
